Researchers from Harvard Medical School, Boston, MA, investigating the pathophysiology of psychotic disorders have found that patients with these disorders have reduced brain volume in the hippocampus.

這裡是固定畫面

The pathophysiology of psychotic disorders has been studied for more than a hundred years but still remains unclear.

Previous research has suggested that alterations in the medial temporal lobe (MTL), hippocampus, parahippocampal gyrus and entorhinal cortex are indicators of schizophrenia.

The extent to which these alterations are found in patients with other psychotic disorders has been inconclusive, however. In bipolar disorder, for instance, most studies show either little or no change in the MTL.
